God is Moving Mountains

For many believers in Uzbekistan, following Jesus requires wisdom in everyday life. Churches are closely monitored, and religious activity outside of approved settings is restricted. Because of this, many Christians choose to meet in homes, keeping their gatherings small and discreet.

Pressure often comes not only from authorities, but from family and community. To follow Christ can be seen as turning away from one's heritage. This can lead to rejection, isolation, or even threats.

And yet, in the midst of these challenges, believers continue to hold on to their faith.

They live one day at a time. They build trust slowly. They share the Gospel carefully, often through quiet conversations rather than public proclamation.

In this environment, faith is not loud, but it is strong.

That wisdom shapes how believers live, speak, and serve. It allows the Church to continue growing, even when it cannot be seen. New believers are coming to faith through relationships, questions, and personal encounters with God.

Scripture is shared carefully. Encouragement is passed from person to person. Small groups become places of discipleship, where believers learn what it means to follow Jesus in a setting that requires both courage and patience.

Faith is not something that can be separated from daily life. It shapes how they think, how they treat others, and how they respond to uncertainty.

Even in silence, their lives point to something greater.

How to Pray:

1. Lord, we praise you for how you are faithfully and quietly drawing people in Uzbekistan to yourself.
2. Lord, we pray that believers will stand strong in faith when they experience rejection and/or persecution for name your sake.
3. Lord, we pray that you would continue to connect Christians together for fellowship, prayer and communion—encouraging them in their faith.
